1. Introduction

Congratulations on choosing a career as an interior redesigner! The demand for redesigners is growing steadily as more homeowners learn about the services provided by interior redesigners. Interior redesigning was recently featured in Entrepreneur's StartUps magazine as a "Hot Biz experiencing especially strong growth." You can be ready for this surge of interest in interior redesign by entering the field today.

Some people have a real knack for being able to redesign rooms to be more attractive, comfortable, and functional. If this describes you, the FabJob Guide to Become a Interior Redesigner will help you take that natural talent and channel it into a lucrative and rewarding career in interior redesign. This book will provide you with a step-by-step road map for reaching success as an interior redesigner. So let's get started!

1.1 What is Interior Redesign?

Interior redesign is using what people already own to decorate their houses with a designer look. There are hidden treasures just waiting to be discovered in most people's homes, but they need your fresh eye to find them. This service is popularly labeled interior redesign, but it is also known as interior refining, interior rearranging, and redecorating.

Homeowners often have a hard time seeing the potential of their rooms, because they've been looking at the same furnishings for years (or decades in some cases). Your new perspective will help them see how it all can be repositioned to make the most of their architecture and personal taste. There are many situations where an interior redesign is ideal for a client; for example:

- They've never achieved the look or feel they originally envisioned for their rooms.
- They want more life out of their existing furniture and accessories but they are bored with the current arrangement.
- Their rooms just aren't comfortable and inviting.
- They've recently moved and want their furniture to look as if it were purchased with the new home in mind.
- They need to combine two households of furniture and blend the two styles.
- They're apartment dwellers or renters who are not allowed to paint, and need their belongings to be the focus of interest.

Interior redesign is appealing to clients because it's usually far less expensive than a complete design makeover or ordering new furniture. Plus, interior redesign can be done quickly. Some interior designers offer "one day decorating" which involves doing a redesign within a single day.

Just think about all the homes in your city including houses, condos, apartments, and other residences. Chances are good that many of these properties are filled with furniture and accessories needing some rearrangement.

When a family first moves into a new home, they would benefit from a redesign to make the most of their belongings in their new space. A recently divorced person may need to downsize to an apartment and make the most of fewer furnishings. Senior citizens who are moving into a smaller residence or retirement community may need your assistance in arranging their treasured belongings collected over the years. Even commercial properties like office buildings can often use help in arranging and accessorizing their lobby or work areas.

This is where you come in. As an interior redesigner, you can help redesign spaces to be even more beautiful, and be paid quite nicely for it. You will learn how to do that in the pages of this guide.

1.2 Interior Redesign as a Career

1.2.1 What Interior Redesigners Do

Interior redesigners can choose to offer a variety of services related to redesigning interiors, including:

Interior Redesign Consultations

A basic service you can offer is redesign consultations for do-it-yourselfers. You will offer recommendations to clients about the most favorable placement of furniture and accessories, plus recommend any new items that will help accentuate and complete the space. Consultations such as this are especially sought after by homeowners who have the capability and time to carry out your ideas, but need some professional advice and a creative eye to get started.

Hands-on Interior Redesign

This involves consultation services along with the actual fulfillment of the suggested plans. Many homeowners have busy lives, and they need the help and knowledge of a professional in order to get a project completed quickly. You will be working in your client's home, occasionally with the homeowner by your side. Some clients will not have the time to tag along on the project, but others will prefer being home to see the changes as they unfold.

Residential and Commercial Redesign

Most of your jobs will probably be in the residential sector, rearranging living spaces in homes and apartments. While this can be your focus, there are also opportunities to use redesign principles in commercial properties. Some of your clients may be business owners or managers who like your style and call you when a decorating need arises in their workplace or company. For example, you could do interior redesign work on office buildings, rearranging and accessorizing lobbies, reception areas, or executive offices.

Other Services You Might Provide

Being your own boss means that you'll have complete control over what services to provide. In addition to providing redesign services you can choose to provide additional services such as organizing, move-in services, home staging (preparing homes for sale), shopping for furnishings and accessories, full service interior decorating, and other related services.

Section 4.1.2 of this guide provides information about a variety of services you can choose to offer as part of your interior redesign business.

1.2.2 Benefits of this Career

Robin Wilson, a New York City based designer who has been featured in O at Home magazine, reveals that her biggest reward comes "When clients walk into their newly redesigned space and have an 'aha' moment with a look of excitement and joy." The heartwarming feeling of helping people take more pleasure in their home is only one of the many benefits offered by a career in interior redesign.

Be Your Own Boss

As the owner of your own interior redesign business you will enjoy the freedom and sense of control that comes with being your own boss. In addition to a flexible work schedule unlimited income potential, it's such a delight to use your creativity on a daily basis.

Express Your Creativity

There are very few things in life as exciting and stimulating as generating imaginative ideas and putting them into practical use. Interior redesign provides endless opportunities to exercise your creativity and problem solving skills while getting paid for it in the process.

Help People Who Need It

Maximizing a home to its full potential is a good deed in many ways. When people enjoy their personal surroundings, they feel comfortable and revitalized every time they walk through the door. A new living room furniture arrangement that allows everyone to easily gather together will greatly enhance a family's quality time. Likewise, a master bedroom can be made into a relaxing retreat for the stressed or over-worked homeowner.

One of the simplest accomplishments of any redesign is that it can help the client feel good about their decorating purchases and decisions, since they see items in a new light.

“I love making people feel good about the home décor they have previously purchased. Many times people think they don't have anything worth redesigning. I love seeing their faces when they see they did make good choices.”

— *Julie Dana, Interior Redesigner and Home Stager,
The Home Stylist*

Redesign Is Green

Green design and environmentally friendly products for the home are a major trend in the industry. British Columbia-based redesigner Judith Lowe says “redesigning is the ‘green’ alternative to redecorating your home; using what you already have thereby reducing our impact on the landfill sites. Redesigning pushes redesigners to be more creative as they have to work with the client's own treasures, artwork, and furniture instead of simply telling a client they have to get rid of everything and start over.”

You Can Start Right Now

With low start-up costs, becoming an interior redesigner is something you can begin as soon as you finish reading this guide. The typical amount needed to launch a redesign business is about $500 to $1,000. My own experience suggests you can spend more or less than this, depending on what equipment and supplies you currently have on-hand. Plus, interior redesign is a business tailor-made for a home office because the bulk of your work will take place in your clients' homes.
