1. Introduction

Welcome to the world of professional organizing!

Perhaps since the first day you realized you had a knack for organizing, you have been dreaming about a way to put your talents to good use. You love to create functional and beautiful surroundings and you always seem to know just how to improve the way tasks are completed and things are done. You have always thought it would be wonderful to be your own boss.

Being a professional organizer allows you to use your talents to teach others to get their lives in order. You will help people live personal and professional lives full of peace, beauty, and most importantly, organization!
As a buyer of this book, you probably got here one of two ways. Either you have always been passionate about order and have a talent for organizing things that began as early as you can remember, or you had an organizational “metamorphosis” in which you suddenly realized that the chaos and the clutter in your life was hurting you, and you changed.

However you got here, there is wonderful news. Even if you have never organized anyone but yourself, you can learn how to be a professional organizer. And there has never been a better time to pursue this career. You have chosen a rapidly growing and relatively young profession that continues to change and progress.

This guide will take you from the first moment you realize you have the organizational skills to create your own business, to the day you have a schedule full of appointments with clients who rely on you to help them get their lives, their homes, and their businesses organized to perfection.

We’ll start by introducing you to the job a professional organizer does. And why would someone want to organize for a living? You’ll find out about the many benefits of this exciting new career that is attracting thousands of new people every year.

1.1 What is a Professional Organizer?

A professional organizer is an individual who helps other people get organized for a living. You will apply your advanced understanding of organizational systems and processes to other people’s chaotic situations, and help them develop solutions that work in their lives. So essentially, you are a professional troubleshooter and problem-solver. In many cases a professional organizer is also a:

- Consultant
- Counselor
- Information systems expert
- Home economist
- Office manager
• Teacher
• Time management coach
• Space designer
• Speaker

If this list looks a little daunting right now, you will soon begin to see that many of these skills are untapped and unrefined skills that you already possess. Others can be learned with a little study and practice, which this guide will lead you through.

A Typical Day

A typical day for a professional organizer can be many things — or anything he or she chooses. They are the ultimate organizational entrepreneurs. On the job, they are often working hands-on with clients who need their help to get their lives, their homes, and their businesses organized.

As you’ll read more about later, people hire organizers to help with things like choosing, purchasing, and installing organizing equipment (filing cabinets, storage containers, racks, etc.), designing time schedules that help them get things done, sorting out files on a computer that have gotten overwhelming, purging an overgrowth of knick-knacks, paper, and other clutter from room to room, or developing systems that maximize the use of time and resources on a personal or business level.

Depending on your specialty, you might be the one to physically rearrange furniture and computer files, or you might simply provide your knowledge and give your clients systems they can implement themselves. You offer guidance, support, and you might even hold the garbage bag!

Professional organizers also spend their days:

• Thinking about organizational challenges
• Listening to clients
• Creating solutions with tools and ideas
• Communicating organizational concepts to clients
• Planning organized systems
• Testing and refining new ideas
• Meeting people and explaining what they do
• Making a difference to their clients

There are so many different ways to be a professional organizer that you can easily refine your own skills to create the sort of business that fits you, your strengths, and your personality. If you have the desire to help people get organized in their homes and businesses, you can learn to be a professional organizer.

A Not-So-Typical Day

Professional organizers are people with motivation and passion about what they do. Quite often they are designing their careers as they go along. You have the luxury of making your business as unique as you want it to be. The organizers interviewed for this book have taken their careers in specialized directions that might be of interest to you too.

For example:

• If you are Barry Izsak, you might spend your day developing training and education programs for other organizers.

• If you are Laurene Livesey Park, you might be co-authoring a book on organizing, or talking on the radio.

• If you are Chris McKenry, you might be facilitating a workshop or speaking at a civic group.

• If you are Rozanne Hird, you might be representing yourself and your company at an important charity event.

1.2 Benefits of the Career

Being a professional organizer is the perfect way for you to be in control of your life, your time, and your income. Here are some of the many benefits you can expect in this fabulous career... and no doubt, you will discover many more on your own.

Help People Live Better Lives

Do you love helping people? Are you someone who really likes the feeling of making an important difference in the lives of others? Being a professional organizer will allow you to make a profound impact on the lives of your clients on a daily basis. People will often think of you as the person who literally “saves” them from a wide variety of problems. Many times clients call an organizer when they feel they are in organizational trouble. You will be the person that helps them to make things right again.

Getting a chance to share your knowledge with people who pay for it, thank you for it, and actually think it is vital to them, is a huge gift. Professional organizers agree that what they do makes an important difference to people, and they get frequent feedback that their clients appreciate their advice and knowledge.

Work at What You Love

One of the most amazing things about becoming a professional organizer is that you will have the opportunity to do what you love all day long, every day, and get paid for it. Most professional organizers agree that it is extremely fulfilling to get paid for something they love to do anyway — create order.

You have the freedom to design a business based on your strengths. Are you great at developing filing systems? Then you might focus on helping those with home or small businesses. Are you someone who likes to work with seniors? Then you might focus on helping seniors move into retirement housing. Are you someone who loves to cook and understands how to make a kitchen into a beautiful and well-functioning place? Then kitchen space design might be your specialty.

As a professional organizer, what you do best becomes the focal point of your business.
Be Your Own Boss

Have you always dreamed that one day you would work for yourself? Have you always wanted to have more control over your career — and actually be in charge of how things turn out? Being in control of your daily work decisions and the long-term outcome of your professional life is something you have to look forward to.

Be Seen as an Expert

As a professional organizer, you become an authority about your business. People will look to you for advice and hire you to solve their problems at home and in the workplace. As you build your business and help your clients find solutions to their organizing dilemmas, word will travel and your popularity and reputation will increase.

You will get a chance to interact with members of your community as you develop a professional network. Professional organizers find that networking and public speaking are some of the most important ways to make contacts and gather new clients. As you develop a flair for public speaking, you will find that you may become known in your own area, and certainly in your business community.

Some professional organizers are sought-after speakers, are regularly asked for interviews for magazine and newspaper articles, and appear on local radio and television shows.

Create Beauty and Order

As a professional organizer, you will get a chance to use and explore your sense of beauty. The most successful organizers talk about how they not only create functional spaces, but also beautiful ones for their clients to use and enjoy. If you have always been told you have a “good eye” or a “flair” for making things work efficiently, as well as look good, your talent will have a home in this career.

Meet New Challenges

Do you have a knack for systems? Are you someone who sees a problem and immediately find yourself brainstorming potential solutions? As a professional organizer, your ability to problem-solve and develop systems will be sought after. Your ability to create order out of chaos will be in high demand.
